March 11, 1914

Friday morning the general assembly of South Carolina adjourned Wednesday night at 9:30 o'clock. No, we are not drunk, neither is the above a mistake of our type setters or an oversight of the proof reader. It was this way. The members had agreed to adjourn Wednesday night and when the time came and they found they were not through they stopped the old clock in house chamber and, so far as the house was concerned, time ceased to be. Friday morning when they finally voted to adjourn, it was still Wednesday night.

General disappointment is expressed that so few of the constructive measures introduced during the session became law. Probably the two most important acts of the session are the vital statistics bill and the negotiable instruments bill, the latter of which you may consult your lawyer about if you are interested. The vital statistics bill provides for a record of all births and deaths in the state. This act becomes effective July 1, 1914, and places the burden of its enforcement upon the state board of health. More than three hundred acts were passed, but nearly all were of a local nature. The senate pared the appropriations bill enough probably to make the taxes this year a little less.

The house was inclined to only be killed in the senate or vetoed by the governor. A history of the senate's session would be a record of things they didn't do. Among the bills that failed to pass and become law might mention the following: the medical inspection act, the compulsory school attendance act, the McLaurin warehouse act, primary reform act, the bill to prevent white teachers from teaching in negro schools, and the 2-cent railroad rate bill.

Sheriff D. P. Douglass is a man with faults, of course, as every other man, but within that manly breast beats a heart noble and true. Most men who suffer bodily harm at the hands of an enemy hold a grudge through life and when the opportunity presents itself retaliate, but not so with the sheriff of this good county of ours. When he went before the grand jury a few days ago to tell that Frances Davis, wife of the negro desperado who was burned in his house near Middendorf by the officers, shot him in the thigh and caused him much pain and quite a bit of money, he told how she had caused him to suffer and said she was guilty, but with tears in his eyes he begged the grand jurors not to find a bill against her because she had three small children who have no one else to look to for support, and said to punish her would cause them to suffer. Unable to say more he walked away and left tears in the eyes of the grand jurors, who were deeply moved by the noble entreaty of this man. Solicitor Spears, with a big lump in his throat, told the jurors that they would be compelled to find a true bill, but he told them that he would never try the case during good behavior of the woman and she was accordingly set free to care for the little ones.

This seems an insignificant matter, but the little things make the great ones, and little deeds of mercy like this mark the difference between heroes and ordinary men.

Baptist

J. M. Sullivan, Pastor.

The Home Field is the organ of the Home Missions Board, Atlanta, Ga. Dr. Victor I. Masters is editor. We hope to be able, if "La Grippe" will permit to see as many as possible to get your subscription for this paper. You need this information, that you may give intelligently to the great cause of Home Missions.

Our Texas Brethren do things in a way worthy of mention. In the Home Field, January number, we take the following from Dr. Love's report. Something like 2,600 messengers actually enrolled at the recent session, and hundreds of messengers and visitors were not included in these figures. By action of the convention, the "Baptist Standard" becomes the property of the convention and will hereafter be under convention control.

Another outstanding feature of the convention was the proposition submitted by Col. and Mrs. C. C. Slaughter to give to the Baptist Memorial Sanitorium at Dallas, two dollars for every three dollars contributed by Texas Baptists up to a total joint sum $500,000. This was the greatest hour in the convention. "God was in his holy place and his people were at the gates of heaven."

This great man Slaughter tho a great sufferer for the past two years, never if able to be carried finds the weather too hot or too cold to be in his seat on Sunday mornings.

Another act of the convention was in a decision to raise one quarter million dollars of the Million Dollar Church Building Loan Fund of the Home Mission Board.

Wednesday evening choir practice. Thursday evening Deacons meeting at my home. Saturday 2:30 p. m. and Sunday 11 a. m. White Plains.

There will be two entertainments given here this week. On Thursday night, the intermediate department of the school will give an entertainment consisting of music, songs, recitations etc.

On Friday night the play, "Mr. Bob" will be presented. The funds derived from these will go for the benefit of The School Betterment Association.

There is being a lot of fertilizer hauled from here and it looks as if the farmers are getting ready to raise another large crop of cotton. Of course they are expecting 15 cents for it next fall.

Boiler, but Dynamite.

Enquirer.

Today of this week there is report current that a boiler belonging to Mr. John A. Secrest blown up at his mill a few miles west of Monroe and that damage had been done. It is not known by some yet that it was a true report. The foundation for the construction of that rests in the fact that on that morning about 9 o'clock, Mr. John A. Winchester who lives on R. F. D. No. 4 from Waxhaw, began burning some brush and having such poor success, decided to try a box of dynamite, consisting of forty sticks, that he had secured from the Howie gold mine and which the donors had considered worthless. He placed the box in the fire and went to his home. It was but a few minutes before the explosion occurred and it was sufficient to make anyone believe that a boiler had exploded and several other steamcaged vessels besides. When Mr. Winchester returned he was unable to find any brush to burn and the spot where rested the "heap" was nicely cleaned. The dynamite was considered worthless and it was the intent of getting rid of it as much anything else in placing it in the fire.

Dr. H. Smith, Eye Sight Specialist will be at Pageland Monday and Tuesday, March 23rd and 24th. Jefferson, Wednesday March 25th. Angelus March 27th. If you have trouble with your eyes and need glasses, see Dr. Smith on some of the above dates.
